School's Out! Home Education Takes Off

Home Learning Association launches new organization to cater to growing population of home-school students.

The Home Learning Association (HLA), America's premier national membership organization is launching Monday 16th of September. The Weston family, led by J. Allen Weston, who serves as HLA's Executive Director, have created the organization to provide comprehensive access to all facets of home-schooling for any family in America. From birth through to college and beyond, the HLA provides opportunities for learning, socializing, fundraising, activities and a very intriguing virtual expo. As membership grows, so too will the benefits.

The numbers of school age children being home-schooled in America, has increased by 75% in the last fourteen years. Conservative estimates place current numbers at around two million students, though it is likely to be a much higher figure. This is around 4% of school aged children, a significant proportion of students who have so far been coping without national support. The HLA has stepped up to fill this role with great ambition.

J. Allen Weston, a long-time homeschooling parent and author is excited, "...we are so very happy to be able to finally offer a real national organization that is sincerely dedicated to helping all home-schoolers, not just certain groups." A membership card provides discounts for dozens of chain stores nationwide, a state by state student council will bring new innovation, comprehensive online eBook and video libraries provide free teaching resources, a virtual expo features exhibitions, presentations and national talent showcases. Weston exclaims "We are serious about becoming the epicenter of this movement and we will do whatever it takes to give people what they need to succeed."

After the launch of the Home Learning Association on Monday, we can look forward to a free e-Book in October covering everything that is needed to know about home-schooling, a low-cost instructional DVD course for parents to help them become effective home-school teachers, a safe and exclusive social network for students and an expanding range of opportunities for all home-school families. Run by home-schoolers, for home-schoolers, the HLA promises to be the leader in its field.
