Englewood, CO September 16th, 2013

The Home Learning Association is now America's only national organization dedicated to assist all homeschoolers with everything they may need to homeschool their children from birth through college. This newly launched organization will benefit homeschoolers by helping to lead and coordinate the homeschooling movement by providing dozens of programs and activities that homeschoolers can participate in nationwide. It's exclusive social network for homeschoolers, fundraising opportunities and talent showcases alone will open up several new opportunities for the homeschoolers who love learning.

This unique concept is the brainchild of the Weston family led by J. Allen Weston who serves as HLA's Executive Director. While announcing the official launch of the Home Learning Association, J. Allen Weston said, "An ever increasing number of students are being pulled out of failing public schools due to the fundamental flaws of the system and the very real dangers facing the children on a daily basis. We felt it was time for someone to step forward to help connect, empower and inspire those families so that they can all succeed at homeschooling." Now, alongside a highly motivated team, the Weston's have designed a platform that looks to make a serious difference in every homeschooler's life.

In the days to come, The Home Learning Association will continue to offer new opportunities to homeschoolers that were previously unavailable to them. Most importantly, the homeschooling community will now have an opportunity work together, network, and share resources on a nationwide basis. They will also be able to participate in several national level activities and programs and raise funds to meet their expenses for the learning tools they need. Members will have access to a wide variety of webinars and seminars, an e-book and video library and specially designed camps. Homeschooled terra scholars will even receive help in their post graduate studies, employment, and business aspirations.
